

turkey time

Alyssa Vitrano

We've got a bunch of wines to go through, and you can drink any of them at this month's big star: Thanksgiving. Not that I care at all about the turkey, but looking forward to all those good sides and pies.

thanksgiving

It's time again for that mishmash of holiday foods all on one table. I always drink American, so here are some basic styles that will be able to flex across all your flavors.

If you do need a heavier red, try a Bordeaux blend like Gentleman Farmer Red Wine ($77). They're a small-production winery in Napa that they describe as the "small farmstand on the side of the road that you may pass without noticing." Well take notice of the Merlot-dominant wine is full of blackberry and light cocoa.